deliberation between 3 and 4 o'clock.
A verdict is expected before midnight.
For her story Mrs. Carman had an excellent setting this afternoon when she went on the stand shortly after 3 o'clock. The small, square, whitewalled courtroom, crowded so that spectators stood jammed together in the corners, held quite as many of her friends as of persons who doubt her innocence. In large majority were women, dressed as if for a house party where a tale of murder would have found no interested ears. A spring breeze blew so softly in upon her that it scarcely rustled the high white collar of her waist. When she paused between answers she could hear the sun-warmed sparrows chirping as they darted among the leaves of the vines that cover the room's outer walls.
